REPLY MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF MOTION TO DISMISS PLAINTIFF'S FIRST AMENDED COMPLAINT

Date: August 18, 2008
Time: 2:30 p.m.
Dept.: 11 - Courtroom of the Honorable John A. Houston
Trial Date: None

Plaintiff argues that the Rooker-Feldman doctrine is not a bar to her lawsuit and she should be allowed to proceed with her lawsuit because defendants conspired about the matters on which the Superior Court later issued dependency orders before there was any judicial involvement; and because her lawsuit is for injuries resulting from her arrest, and the underlying removal of her children and not for alleged injuries flowing from the Superior Court's dependency orders.

1 First, as concerns Powell's false arrest claim, it is not alleged against defendant 2 Smith. Rather, it is directed against Chula Vista Police Department personnel who 3 have not appeared in this action. Since there is no allegation that defendant Smith was 4 involved in the arrest, and because there is no vicarious liability under section 1983
5 jurisprudence, no false arrest claim is stated against defendant Smith. Taylor v. List, 6 880 F.2d 1040, 1045 (9th Cir. 1989); Palmer v. Sanderson, 9 F.3d 1433, 1437-1438
7 (9th Cir. 1993). The false arrest claim must be dismissed as to defendant Smith.

8 In her opposition, plaintiff tries to salvage the balance of her lawsuit from the 9 Rooker-Feldman jurisdictional bar by arguing she is not challenging the Superior 10 Court's dependency orders that authorized removal of the children, but that she is 11 suing for injuries caused by the underlying removal of her children. As will be 12 demonstrated below by a review of plaintiff's contentions and case authorities, her 13 argument is illogical because it is that very removal that the dependency orders pertain 14 to. If the removal was authorized by the dependency orders, then there can be no basis 15 for any damage claim. To obtain damages, plaintiff would need to prove that the 16 dependency orders were errant and that proof is what is barred by the Rooker-Feldman 17 doctrine. Additionally, if plaintiff's argument were taken at face value, that is that she 18 is suing for the underlying removal of the children from the family home, then plaintiff 19 has just argued herself out of a case against defendant Smith because Smith did not and 20 is not alleged to have removed the children from the family home in the first instance.

21 Plaintiff attempts to convince the Court that her lawsuit is not a challenge to the 22 Superior Court dependency orders, by saying her federal lawsuit was filed before the 23 Superior Court issued any dependency order pertaining to her children. But she is 24 contradicted by her own pleadings. Plaintiff's original complaint was filed on 25 September 19, 2007. Almost a year before, on August 22, 2006, the Superior Court 26 Juvenile Division issued its first dependency order pertaining to plaintiff and her 27 children. And some seven months before plaintiff filed her federal lawsuit, the 28 ///

1 Superior Court issued the dependency order to which plaintiff with her attorney 2 stipulated on February 1, 2007.

3 Citing Nesses v. Shepard, 68 F.3d 1003 (7th Cir. 1995), plaintiff also argues that 4 she should be allowed to proceed with her federal action because she sues defendant 5 Smith and others for corrupting the state judicial process. Nesses does not assist 6 plaintiff in salvaging her action as against the bar of the Rooker-Feldman doctrine, res 7 judicata, or collateral estoppel. Nesses sued lawyers and judges who were involved in 8 his state court contract case alleging they engaged in a massive conspiracy to engineer 9 his defeat in state court contract action. The federal district court dismissed his lawsuit 10 for want of jurisdiction under the Rooker-Feldman doctrine. On appeal the judgment 11 was affirmed on res judicata grounds. Speaking to the Rooker-Feldman doctrine, the 12 appellate court observed that Nesses could not show injury from the alleged conspiracy 13 unless the decision dismissing his suit for breach of contract was shown to be 14 erroneous and that endeavor would be barred by the Rooker-Feldman doctrine. Nesses 15 v. Shepard, 68 F.3d at 1005. But even supposing that Nesses were alleging some kind 16 of a claim against the lawyers and judges for allegedly corrupting the state judicial 17 process that was independent of the state court's disposition of his contract case, 18 Nesses could not pursue such a claim unless he could first establish that the allegedly 19 tainted state court judgment had been set aside or reversed and that the state court 20 action terminated in his favor. Id. Plaintiff may say she is suing for an alleged 21 corruption of the state dependency judicial process, but she cannot sue therefore 22 because she cannot plead or prove that dependency proceedings terminated in her 23 favor, that is that the dependency orders have been set aside or reversed on appeal.

24 Plaintiff also argues that her lawsuit should not be barred because she allegedly did 25 not have any reasonable opportunity to raise her contention that false evidence was 26 being used against her in the Superior Court dependency proceedings. In support of 27 this argument, plaintiff relies on Long v. Shorebank Dev. Corp., 182 F.3d 548 (7th Cir.
28 1999). Long is distinguishable and inapposite to plaintiff's case. In Long, Shorebank

1 brought an unlawful detainer action in Illinois state court against tenant Long based on 2 past due rent. Long acted in propria persona and maintained she was not in arrears.
3 Just prior to a hearing on the matter, the landlord's attorney induced Long to sign a 4 stipulated eviction judgment by telling her that the document was only a stipulation to 5 continue the hearing date and that she could use the continuance to resolve her dispute 6 with the landlord. Afterwards, without giving notice to Long, the landlord's attorney 7 made an ex parte court appearance, told the court that Long did not dispute the 8 landlord's claims, and had judgment entered against the tenant. Long then sued in 9 federal court alleging violation of the federal Fair Debt Collections Practices Act and 10 for deprivation of due process under § 1983. Finding that the Rooker-Feldman 11 doctrine does not bar federal lawsuits by claimants who had no realistic opportunity in 12 state court to raise the grounds on which they premise their federal claims, Long was 13 allowed to proceed with her federal lawsuit not because her opponent's chicanery kept 14 her out of court, but rather because Illinois state law precluded her from raising her due 15 process and Fair Debt Collection Practices Act violations concerns in the unlawful 16 detainer action. Long v. Shorebank Dev. Corp., 182 F.3d at 559. Unlike in Long, there 17 is no similar restriction under California law that prohibited plaintiff and her attorneys 18 in the Superior Court dependency proceedings from raising any of the issues she now 19 seeks to litigate in this action. To the contrary, plaintiff actually did raise her 20 contentions in Superior Court. (Lgmt. 261- 297.) Plaintiff cannot circumvent the 21 Rooker-Feldman bar.

22 Citing to Ernst v. Child & Youth Servs., 108 F.3d 486, 492 n.4 (3rd Cir. 1997), 23 plaintiff also argues that the Rooker-Feldman doctrine does not bar her from suing to 1 prove that the dependency judgment that was entered by stipulation on February 1, 2 2007, was obtained in bad faith.¹ Ernst is not authority for plaintiff's proposition. And 3 Ernst is distinguishable and detrimental to plaintiff's claim.

4 Ernst was the grandmother and sole guardian of her granddaughter who was 5 removed from Ernst's care pursuant to a dependency petition and stipulated 6 dependency adjudication order. As administration of the dependency case progressed, 7 Ernst's relationship with the Children & Youth Services ("CYS") agency of Chester
8 County, Pennsylvania, deteriorated. And instead of reunification, CYS pursued 9 permanent foster family placement for the granddaughter. Ernst regained custody of 10 her granddaughter. Ernst sued the CYS and its personnel alleging they violated her 11 procedural due process rights, and violated her substantive due process rights by 12 making dependency recommendations to the state court out of malice and personal 13 bias. Ernst, 108 F.3d at 492. On appeal defendants prevailed. Defendants were 14 accorded absolute immunity for the recommendations they made to the court and for 15 advocating the CYS case. Also, the CYS defendants raised the Rooker-Feldman 16 doctrine as a defense. The Ernst court felt the Rooker-Feldman doctrine did not 17 deprive it of jurisdiction to adjudicate Ernst's claim first because the state court in the 18 dependency proceeding did not address Ernst's claim of malice and bias and thus that 19 claim could not be said to have been "inextricably intertwined with the state court's 20 decision"; second, because in the Ernst court's estimation addressing Ernst's claim 21 would not require the court to find that the state court dependency judgment that issued 22 in reliance on the recommendations was erroneous; and third, because Ernst's request 23 for money damages was not the equivalent of an appeal on the state court judgment.
24 Ernst, 108 F.3d at 492. Ernst is distinguishable and contrary to Ninth Circuit 25 authority.

27 ¹ Under California Welfare and Institutions Code section 388, and California Code of Civil Procedure section 28 473, plaintiff had ample process to move to alter, revise and to seek relief from court orders and judgments due to changed circumstances, mistake surprise etc.

1 The fulcrum of Powell's claim against defendant Smith is that defendant Smith 2 proffered false evidence during the Juvenile Court dependency proceedings.² Unlike 3 in Ernst, plaintiff's contentions regarding the grounds for her children's removal and 4 the credibility of the social workers involved in the case were litigated in the Superior 5 Court dependency proceedings with findings issuing thereon. Lgmt. p. 21:24-28; 6 Lgmt. p. 026; Lgmt. p. 028; Lgmt. p. 30; Lgmt. pp. 50-55, 58:18 - 59; Lgmt. pp. 68-7 75; Lgmt. pp. 85-87; Lgmt. 261- 297; Lgmt. 298- 302; Lgmt. 303-308.

8 "The Rooker-Feldman doctrine precludes district courts from considering 9 constitutional claims that are "inextricably intertwined" with the state court's rulings.
10 Id. [Worldwide Church of God v. McNair, 805 F.2d 888 (9th Cir. 1986)] at 891. A 11 federal claim is considered "inextricably intertwined" with a state court judgment 'if 12 the federal claim succeeds only to the extent that the state court wrongly decided the 13 issues before it.' Pennzoil Co. v. Texaco Inc., 481 U.S. 1, 25, 107 S. Ct. 1519, 95 L.
14 Ed. 2d 1 (1987)." Gimbel v. State of California, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28201, *4.
15 Plaintiff's lawsuit is barred because the factual basis for her claim against defendant 16 Smith was litigated and is therefore inextricably intertwined with the juvenile court's 17 decisions involving plaintiff and her children.

18 Also, Ernst was allowed to proceed with her challenge to the subjective 19 motivations of persons who prosecuted the state dependency action because the Ernst 20 court concluded that a ruling on that issue would not undermine the integrity of the 21 state court's dependency order, and because it did not perceived Ernst's request for 22 monetary damages as a challenge to the dependency order. That conclusion was 23 anomalous and inconsistent with Ninth Circuit authority. In Kelley v. Kahan, 2006
24 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36595, Kelley, much like plaintiff here, alleged that the procedures 25 and substantive outcomes in his state action were manifestations of a conspiracy to 26 deprive him of his civil rights. A domestic violence protection order precluded Kelley

27
28 ² As explained in defendant's moving papers, defendant Smith has absolute immunity for any claim for presenting evidence in a court hearing.

1 from contacting his daughter, and required him to attend parenting classes, and 2 undergo a psychological evaluation. The court found Kelly's federal action was "the 3 functional equivalent of an appeal of the state court decision," and therefore barred.
4 The court explained, "Kelley complains of a conspiracy that deprived him of his ability 5 to interact with his daughter and, perhaps, of his due process rights. The same harm 6 that he identifies as the outcome of the conspiracy is that which was the result of the 7 state court proceedings. . . Kelley cannot seek a remedy in federal court for a harm 8 imposed by a state court decision. It is irrelevant that Kelley does not specifically seek 9 reversal of the state court's decision, but rather only asks 'for any and all damages 10 allowed by law in an amount to be proved at trial' and '[f]or such other relief as the 11 Court may deem to be just, proper, and equitable.' Complaint ¶¶ 53, 58. This 12 distinction lacks salience because in order to establish the predicate injury to his claim, 13 'the plaintiff would have to show that the violation of such an independent right caused 14 an erroneous adverse decision to be made and this is precluded by the Rooker-Feldman 15 doctrine.' [citation omitted]." Kelley, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36595, *12. Citing to 16 Bianchi v. Rylaarsdam, 334 F.3d 895, 896 (9th Cir. 2003), the court in Kelly decided 17 that the court lacks subject matter jurisdiction when "to entertain his challenge and 18 grant relief would necessarily require us to review and invalidate the state court 19 decision." Kelley v. Kahan, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36595, *9. The focus is thus on 20 the federal claim's relationship to the issues involved in the state court proceeding, 21 instead of on the type of relief sought by the plaintiff.

22 Plaintiff's federal lawsuit here is barred for the same basic reasons Kelly's 23 action was barred. The injury she alleges to have incurred by reason of the removal of 24 her children is the same injury imposed on her by the Superior Court's dependency 25 orders. For her to succeed in this action she would have to show that the Superior 26 Court's findings in connection with its orders were erroneous. Powell says in her 27 opposition that she is not seeking by this lawsuit to overturn the Superior Court's 28 dependency orders, but rather seeks redress for injuries incurred by virtue of the 1 removal of her children. But that removal has already been adjudicated in Superior 2 Court. If the removal was for cause, there is no injury for which compensation can be 3 due. As stated in defendant's moving papers because she is but seeking to relitigate 4 issues already adjudicated by the Superior Court, her federal action is barred.

5 Based on the foregoing and defendant's moving papers, plaintiff's amended 6 complaint should be dismissed with prejudice because it is barred by the Rooker-7 Feldman Doctrine, the full faith and credit clause, res judicata, collateral estoppel, 8 because Julie Smith is absolutely immune for her conduct as a witness providing 9 evidence in the juvenile court proceedings, and because the state court holds exclusive 10 jurisdiction over plaintiff's claims to custody of her children.
